Market Summary

Economic Conditions

- The U.S. stock market gave up nearly all its gains for the year as investors became concerned about rising rates, the upcoming midterm elections, future corporate earnings, a trade war with China, Brexit, Italian budget woes, and general geopolitical uncertainty.
- The advance release of third-quarter U.S. gross domestic product (GDP) showed surprisingly strong growth of 3.5%, boosted by consumer spending, government spending, and inventory replenishment. These factors more than offset weak business investment and the biggest drag from trade in 33 years.
- The U.S. economy added 250,000 new jobs in October, well above estimates, while the unemployment rate remained unchanged at 3.7%—the lowest since 1969.
- Average hourly earnings—an important measure of wage growth—rose 3.1% year over year (YoY), the fastest pace since 2009.
- The Federal Reserve’s Beige Book—released in advance of the November Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting—was subdued, noting “modest to moderate growth” in economic activity from a majority of Federal Reserve (Fed) Districts. In particular, manufacturers reported moderate output growth, citing concerns over rising materials and shipping costs, trade uncertainty, and difficulty finding qualified workers.
- The U.S. housing market has weakened as rising home prices, higher mortgage rates, a scarcity of materials, and lack of construction labor have slowed activity. Residential investment fell 4% in the third quarter, the third consecutive quarter as a drag to GDP growth. A drop in forward indicators, like housing starts and building permits, portend further weakness in the months ahead.
- The U.S. dollar (USD) pushed higher over the month, increasing the drag on exports and corporate earnings, especially those of multinational companies. It also does not bode well for emerging market (EM) economies because a significant portion of their debt is denominated in USD, which became more costly to pay back.

Market Reaction

- U.S. Treasury yields rose in early October to new highs for this phase of the cycle, with 10-year and two-year yields reaching their highest levels since 2011 and 2008, respectively. But, the sell-off in equity markets triggered a brief rally that left yields higher for the month, though off their highs. The 30-year Treasury led rate increases, rising by 20 basis points (bps) (0.20%) during the month.
- Fixed-income returns were mixed for the month. For example, one- and five-year Treasuries returned 0.20% and 0.10%, respectively. Meanwhile, 10- and 30-year maturities returned -0.60% and -3.64%, respectively.
