Market Summary

Economic and Market Conditions

- The year began with general optimism that the long running economic expansion in the U.S. would continue, supported by a healthy job market, upbeat consumer confidence and household spending, a rebound in manufacturing activity, a surging stock market and a pickup in global growth.
- As of early February, the coronavirus had infected over 40,000 people, concentrated largely in China, and caused over 1,000 deaths, making it more prevalent and deadly than the SARS outbreak of 2002-2003. According to IMF data, since the SARS outbreak 17 years ago, China has grown from 4% of the global economy to over 16%, making the economic toll from the current health crisis exponentially greater. Deutsche Bank estimates the current outbreak will reduce China's Q1 GDP by 1.5% and lower global GDP by 0.2%.
- The market responded by pushing Treasury yields lower by 25 to 40 basis points (0.25%-0.40%), sending oil markets into a bear market sell-off, and temporarily reversing early-year stock market gains. The yield curve inverted and the probability of a Fed rate cut in 2020 increased from 60% at the beginning of the year to pricing in two full rate cuts as of January 31st.
- The Federal Reserve left interest rates unchanged at its January meeting, as expected, maintaining the target range for overnight rates at 1½ to 1¾ percent. Chair Powell noted that “monetary policy is well positioned” to support “continued economic growth, a strong job market, and a return of inflation to our symmetric 2 percent goal.”
- The U.S. economy grew at a slightly better-than-expected 2.1% pace in the fourth quarter of 2019, and 2.3% for the entire year. A sharp decline in imports was notable, causing net exports (usually a detractor) to contribute 1.5% to the overall reading. Growth in consumer spending was tepid and private inventories fell sharply, but residential housing and government spending were positive contributors.
- The Federal Reserve's balance sheet has expanded by over $400 billion since August 2019. The Fed has committed to Treasury-Bill purchases at least into the second quarter and continuing repo operations through April 2020 to ensure an ample supply of reserves.
